Group Description

The Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education (ACGME) is an independent, nonprofit organization responsible for accrediting graduate medical education (GME) programs—including residencies and fellowships—in the United States. ACGME establishes and maintains standards that ensure physicians in training receive high-quality, safe, and effective education across all medical specialties and subspecialties. Through accreditation, continuous program evaluation, and outcomes-based assessment, ACGME promotes excellence in physician education while emphasizing patient safety, quality improvement, physician well-being, and healthcare system effectiveness. Its work supports teaching hospitals, academic medical centers, sponsoring institutions, program directors, and faculty in preparing the next generation of physicians to meet the evolving needs of patients and communities.

Attendee Profile

The ACGME 2026 Annual Educational Conference will be attended by a broad cross-section of the graduate medical education (GME) community from around the world, typically drawing thousands of GME professionals focused on advancing physician training and medical education. Attendees include designated institutional officials (DIOs), program directors, associate program directors, faculty members, and clinical educators, as well as program and institutional administrators/coordinates, residents, and fellows engaged in residency and fellowship training. The event also attracts hospital and medical school leaders, academic researchers, and other stakeholders interested in accreditation, educational best practices, well-being, assessment, and innovations in GME. Participants attend to learn from expert sessions, share research and innovations, engage in professional development, and network with peers and leaders shaping the future of medical education.
