SoT 65th Annual Meeting & ToxExpo

Society of Toxicology

Sunday, March 22nd – Wednesday, March 25th, 2026

Anticipated Attendance: 5,600

Group Description

The Society of Toxicology (SOT) is a global professional organization dedicated to advancing the science of toxicology and promoting the application of toxicological research to protect human health and the environment. Its membership is composed of scientists, researchers, clinicians, regulators, and industry professionals working across academia, government agencies, pharmaceutical and biotechnology companies, environmental health organizations, and consulting firms. SOT provides a collaborative forum for sharing scientific discoveries, shaping public health policy, and fostering education and professional development through its annual meetings, specialty sections, and continuing education programs.

Attendee Profile

The event draws academic researchers, principal investigators, and graduate students presenting the latest findings in areas such as environmental exposures, drug safety, molecular mechanisms, and risk assessment. Professionals from pharmaceutical, biotechnology, and chemical industries attend to share and explore innovations in safety testing and product development. Representatives from government and regulatory agencies participate to discuss policy, regulatory science, and public health implications of toxicological research. Additionally, the ToxExpo attracts exhibitors and decision-makers from research organizations, laboratory suppliers, consulting firms, and academic institutions who showcase cutting-edge tools, technologies, and services that support the toxicology community. Across the meeting, participants engage in scientific sessions, poster presentations, continuing education courses, networking, and professional development activities that span the full spectrum of toxicological science.
